The coalition of kings against Anadetiw was now complete, If Bernard could effeet it, the weight of the blow would fall as well upon Roger an upon the schismatic Pope, lie charged all his appeals with invectives against the Sicilian, Lo» thar'n resentment wits funned by a reminder of the imperial claim to the south of Italy. "It is C«J8tir*8 tluty to win buck the crown which is his by right from the Sicilian usurper. Bvery one who makes hirnaelf king in Sicily speaks against CirKitr," * Bernard[1]*; diplomatic skill further won over Genoa and Pisa to place their fleets on the aide of the coalition, Might and Right were there leagued together. Anacletus, he said, had only one on his side of the princes of Europe,, namely the Duke of Apulia, bought by the pitiful price of a usurped crown, He set the fashion; for most of his life Roger is to all his foes the "Sicilian usurper," "the half-heathen King,"

Bernard had thus isolated Anacletus, In the spring of 1132, both Innocent and he appeared in North Italy to prepare the way for an imperial army. The march of the latter was slow; in the interval Bernard secured a definite treaty with Genoa at Corneto in March, 1133, by which Genoa promised a fleet. Innocent at Pisa won

that city over by her archbishop as Primate over Corsica, In the way
Genoa
a Metropolitan see and freed from Milan • (January, 1133), Anacletus
meanwhile

» S, Ben*;, op. 1391 Wattwich, P.R.W., if,, 214.